

PEGGY JABLONSKI

Peggy served as a senior leader in Higher Education for over 30 years, managing major areas of colleges at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Brown University, and University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill with supervisory responsibility for hundreds of employees and approximately $100M. Her leadership background includes policy development, strategic planning, organizational assessment and change, emergency preparedness and response, leadership mentoring, and managing complex building projects.

As a faculty member at both the undergraduate and graduate levels, Peggy designed innovative new courses for all levels in educational policy and leadership theory. She authored numerous articles for publication on such topics as Campus Crisis Planning, Student Affairs Research, College Students and Spirituality, and Women and Leadership.

As a supervisor for thirty years, Peggy hired and trained hundreds of staff at all levels of the organization mentoring and coaching professionals through organizational change and personal life transitions. Working at several institutions exposed her to different cultures, organizational structures, and diverse leadership styles. As a trained mediator, Peggy found that most projects and issues involve some form of conflict discovery and resolution. Developing effective communication strategies, processing conflict, and managing change are all at the heart of effective organizational growth and success.

Peggy received her coaching training from the Gestalt Center (MA) and the Gallup Strengths program earning the Professional Certified Coach or PCC designation from the International Coaching Federation. Peggy continues to focus on equity issues and mind/body connections in coaching with nonprofits, businesses, and government agencies, as well as with higher education executives. As an avid sports enthusiast, she also coaches individuals involved with sports, in particular her passion of golfing.
